Imagine places where young people grow up and feel no fear, no hatred, no disdain. And, they feel safe, respected, confident, and cared for by all those around them. These are places where no one bullies and no one is bullied. Unless we, the adults in their midst, act to protect young people and connect them to caring family members and friends, they won’t have this imagined world – one that we know every young person deserves.

During the 2015 Summer Institute, consider personal, interpersonal, school, community, and cultural factors that underlie bullying. Explore the negative effects of relational, physical, and cyberbullying on adolescents’ healthy social and emotional development. Recognize markers of bullying and learn when and how to respond, pursuing a path toward resolution and reconciliation. Talk with health and social service providers, counselors, and teachers who work daily to connect and protect young people from the sometimes-devastating outcomes of bullying.

See how youth leaders are taking a stand against the injustices of bullying, leading peers in meaningful bullying prevention efforts. Hear how educators, practitioners, and policy makers in classrooms, clinics, and communities are changing school culture and social environments, promoting prevention and response. Gain strategies for moving toward respect, resolution, and reconciliation. Learn ways to inspire young people to reflect on the impact of their behaviors on others and grow in their capacity for developing caring and healthy relationships.
